Biography:

I grew up a traveling kid, living on both coasts and the middle of the United States (plus a year in China) with my family before attending college. While at Clark University I designed my own undergraduate major in Multi-media Design, taking course work in film, graphic design, computer music, studio art, philosophy and religious studies. After college I experienced the contemporary art and culture landscape in San Francisco and Brooklyn. In New York I received a Masters of Education through the prestigious New York City Teaching Fellows while teaching special education in a Brighton Beach public school. In 2005 I attended Foundation Studies in Anthroposophy ("wisdom of the human being") and Waldorf Teacher Training at Sunbridge College in Spring Valley, New York, before spending three years as Projector Coordinator for the Threefold Educational Center (www.threefold.org).

I have served as a core group member of the peer-led training in social threefolding, Think OutWord (www.thinkoutword.org), and in 2008 received a Credere social art community grant for The New Forms Project, a social sculpture exploring the intersection between an embodied life and sacred, aesthetic technology.

Traveling is still an important part of my life and studies. I have spent time in Costa Rica, Kenya, New Zealand, Fiji, the Philippines and throughout Europe and North America.
